

Statement by Parul P. Desai
June 22, 2009

Increasingly, citizens are relying on the Internet and their wireless and broadband connections for political, economic, and social discourse. This democratic nature of the medium is dependent on broadband accessibility and affordability. To ensure accessibility and affordability for all citizens, it is critical that special access be available to broadband providers and competitors under reasonable rates, terms, and conditions.